

Factors of Undergraduate Student Satisfaction

ANANYA NUGGEHALLI
CYNTHIA LIM

What factors contribute to undergraduate life satisfaction?

Data

- 2694 student responses, all undergraduate
- 9 Focus Areas

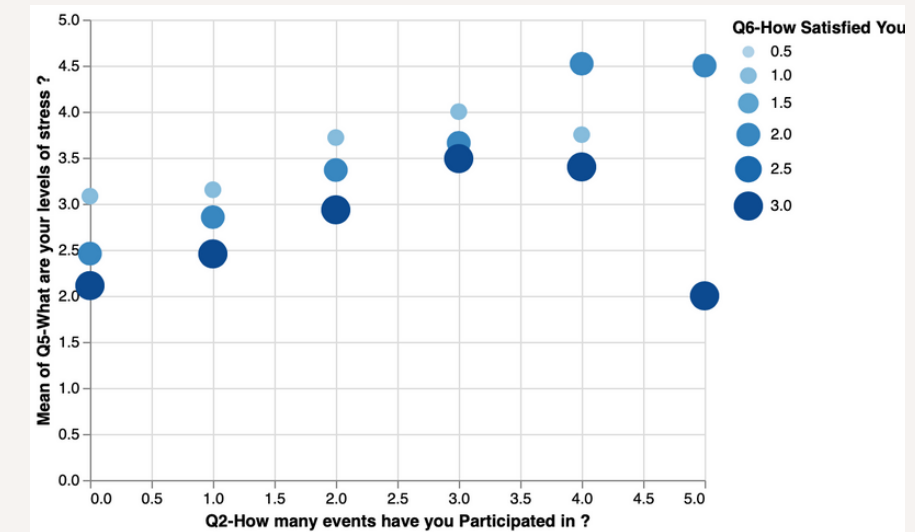

Iteration I

Which areas of constant discourse in academic performance affects the mental outlook of students in terms of satisfaction and stress?

Iteration II

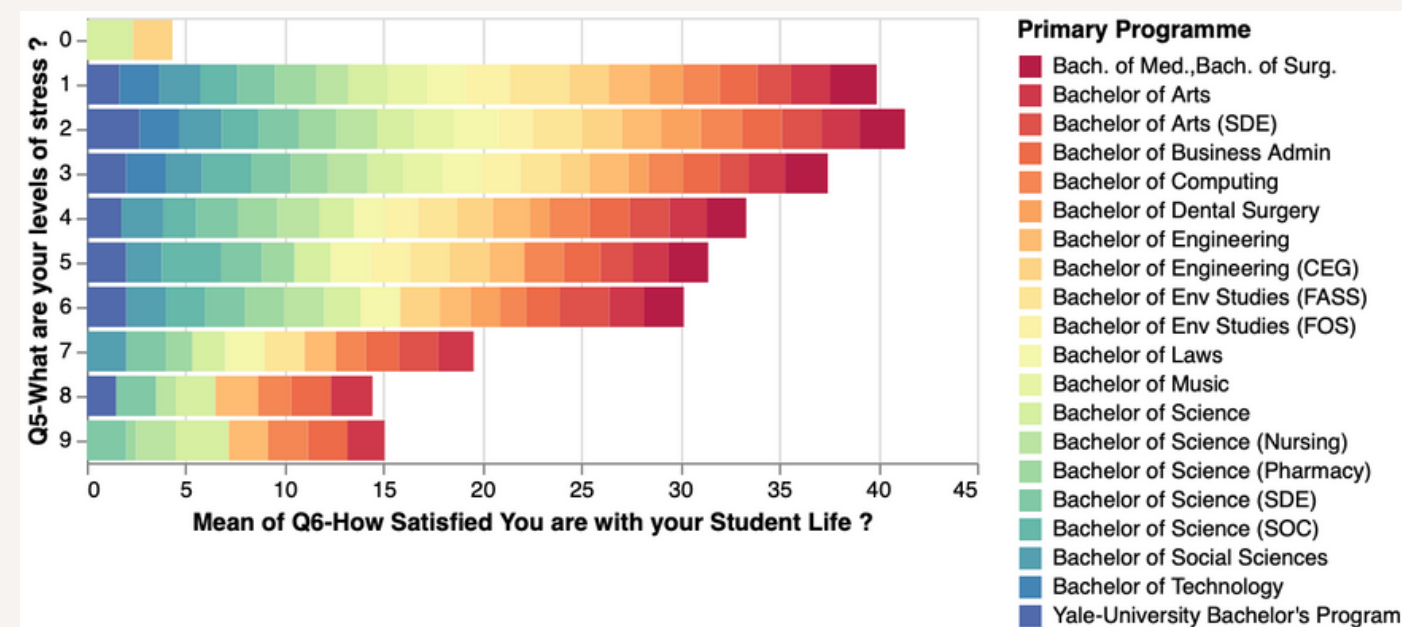

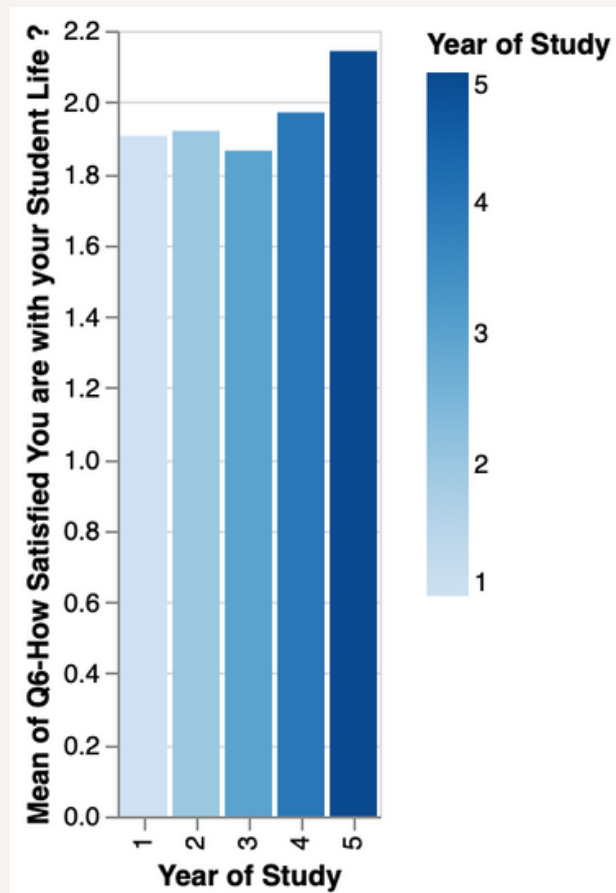

Does housing type and department (e.g. School of Business, School of Law) impact student satisfaction?

Iteration III

Looks further into the more internal and personal factors of a student's life: stress levels, interaction (measured using an ordinal scale), and participation (measured by the amount of events they participate in)

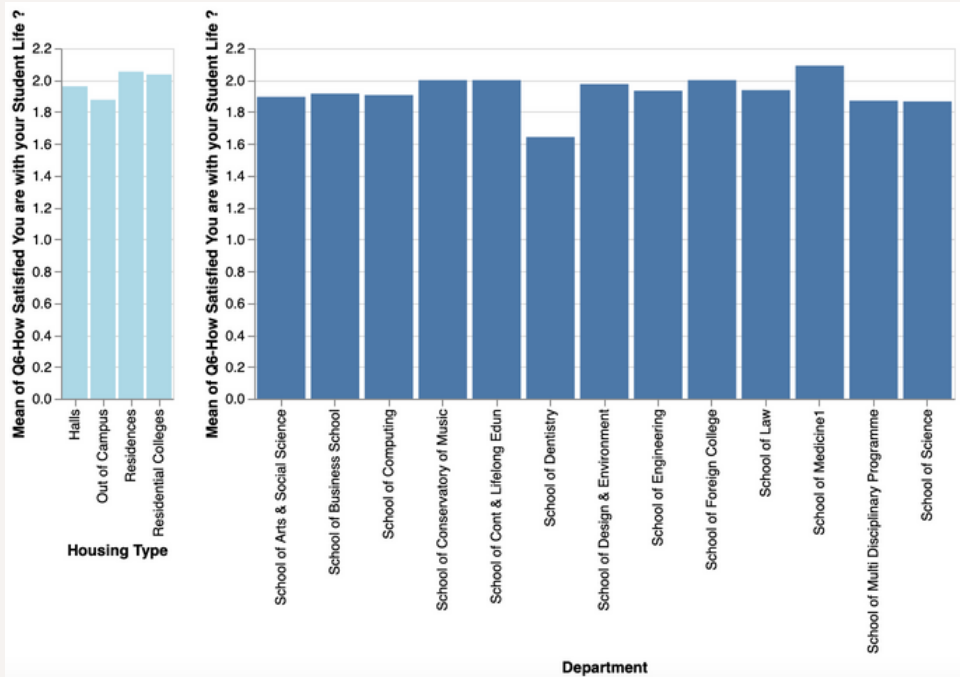

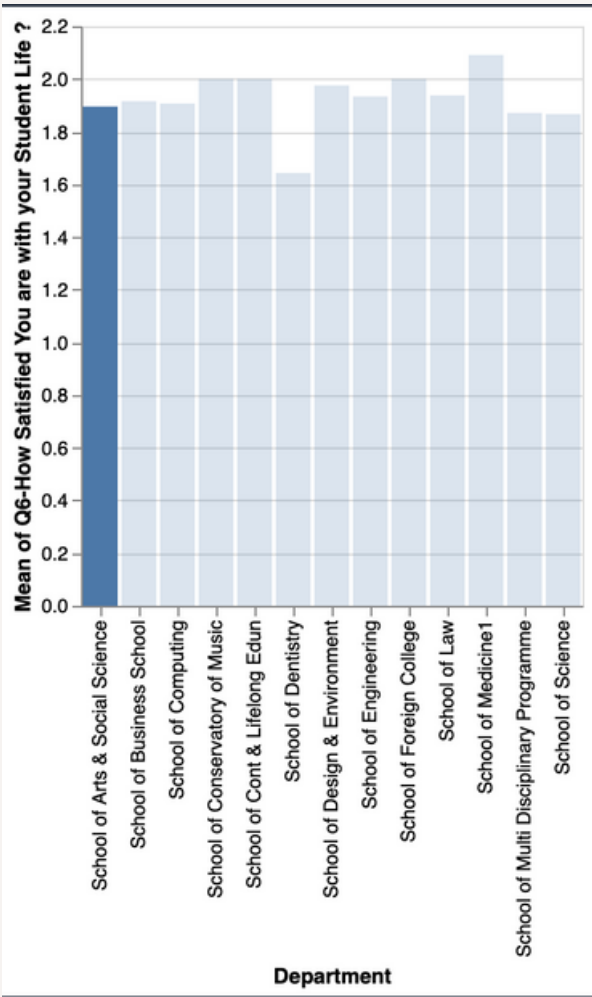

VISUALIZATIONS

Iteration I

- As time at the institution increases the average satisfaction increased with the exception of year 3
- Satisfaction vs. Stress: the highest satisfaction levels came from low but existing stress levels.

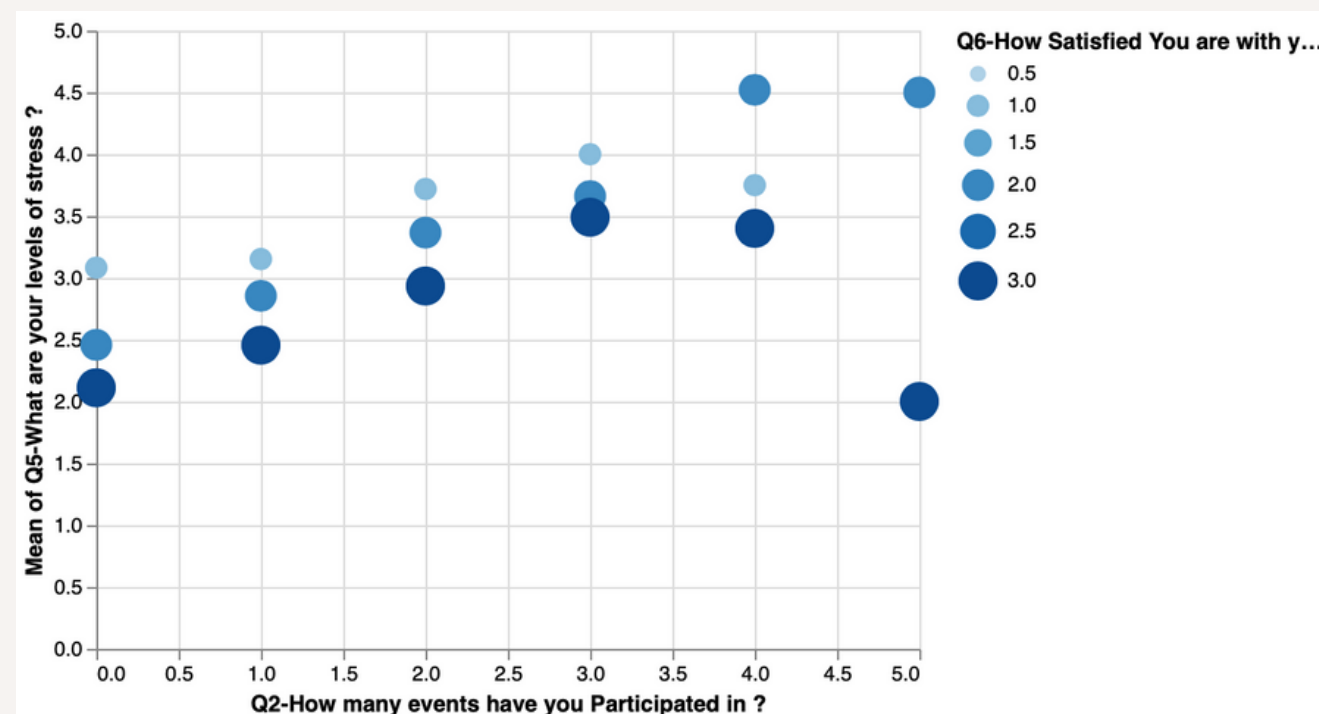

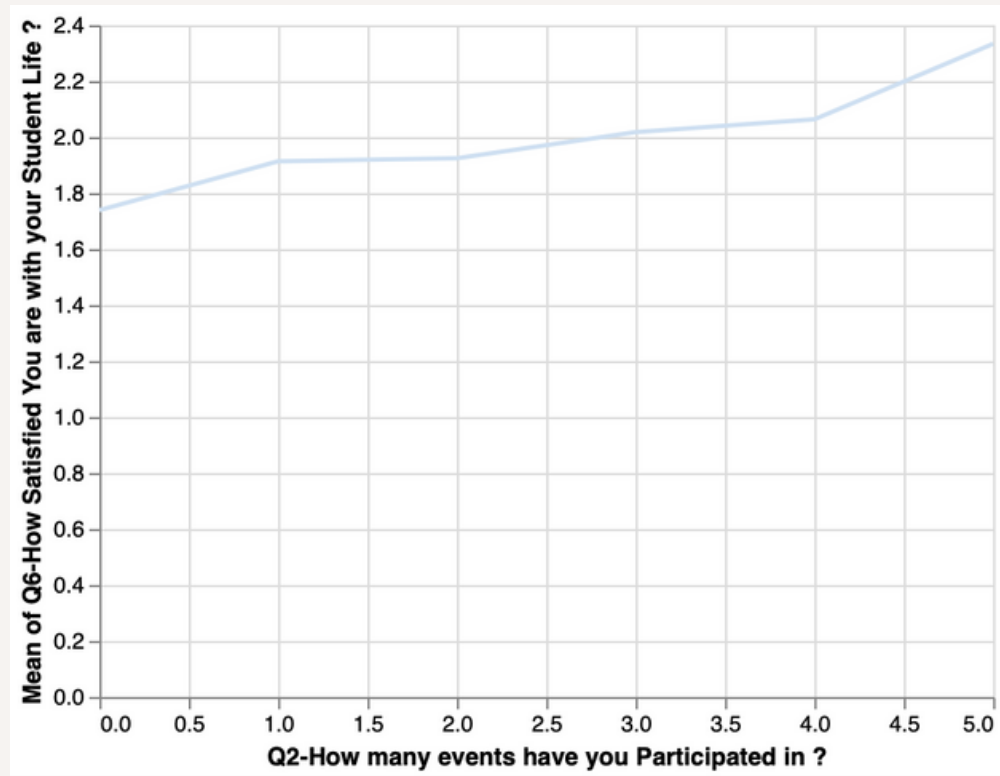

VISUALIZATIONS

Iteration II

- Housing did not have a strong direct correlation with satisfaction but had a correlation with how varied satisfaction would be
- When examined in relation to Housing, Department doesn't impact overall satisfaction

VISUALIZATIONS

Iteration III

- The amount of effort someone puts into interacting with others directly correlates to higher satisfaction
- Participation in more events does not necessarily mean increased satisfaction, but it does typically increase stress levels

Conclusion

Factors of Significant Impact

Factors that significantly impact undergraduate satisfaction included:

- Stress Levels
- Effort in interacting with others
- Primary Program
- Department

Factors of Small Impact

Factors that slightly impact undergraduate satisfaction included:

- Housing Type
- Event Participation
- Year

Factors of No Impact

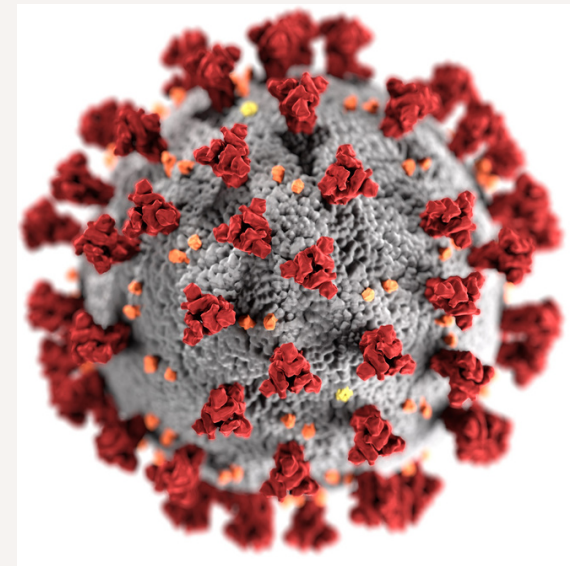

A factors that had no impact on undergraduate satisfaction was gender

Next Steps

Digging Deeper

Look deeper into the factors that significantly impacted satisfaction levels

COVID-19

Explore the ways that COVID-19 has impacted undergraduate satisfaction

Thank you!